

Guðrún Gísladóttir

Born and raised in Iceland, where she went to commercial college, followed by Scandinavian Studies, Linguistics, Literature and Political Science at the University in Lund, Sweden. She continued her studies at the Faroese University in Tórshavn. While a university student, she was a political activist and later went on to work in publishing and the news world, continuing her political activities. For the last twenty years she has lived in Copenhagen, Denmark, and works as a photographer. She has exhibited her work in several countries in Europe and in the USA. She is Co-director of the European Artists' Rights, and a delegate of the European Council of Artists on the ECSPM, where she has served as General Secretary and webmistress. She also works as a free-lance translator, with Icelandic, which is her mother tongue, and several other languages, including English, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and Faroese. She also has basic skills in German and significant digital literacy.